County Farm Bureau Provides New Service

Mr. Walter E. Henry, President of the Appomattox County Farm Bureau announced that the county organization is furnishing a new service to all members of Farm Bureau in the county as a part of the regular program of services to members. The new service, a Tractor Accidental Death coverage, provides through the Virginia Farm Bureau Mutual Insurance Company, according to Henry, is not sold to individual members but is provided to all members in the county at no extra membership fee. The county Farm Bureau pays the premium out of the membership fee paid to the county organization.

The coverage pays $1,000 for accidental death to the member or spouse if the accident is caused by a farm tractor or self - propelled farm equipment used in a farming operation. The policy also provides for a payment of $500 in the event of the death of an unmarried minor child of the household.

"We are glad to be able to provide this service which we believe to be a good one," Mr. Henry said. "Coverage is automatic and no member needs to apply for it," he continued. The coverage, based on a decision of the Board of Directors of the county organization, will begin March 15 and continue through the remainder of the year.

Flood Of Pennies For Ga. Academy

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Fore, of Pamplin, received recently in a lone newsy letter from their daughter, Helen Brown, R. N., who lives in Collegedale, Tenn., an account of the climax of the "Two Million Penny Campaign Gathering" that was celebrated Sunday, Mar. 15, 1964, from 1:30 p.m. to 4 p.m. at Georgia - Cumberland Academy, which she and her husband, Pastor V. C. Brown and sons, Billy and Jerry, attended along with about 4,000 others.

The campaign to raise two million or more pennies was begun by the Georgia - Cumberland Conference of Seventh-day Adventist Jan. 25, to help finance the construction and equip the building on the campus of the Georgia - Cumberland Academy about five miles from Calhoun, Ga. The success of the campaign far exceeded the expectations of all who participated instead of 2,000,000 nearly 3.4 million pennies were brought in.

There were many colorful displays. Some brought their coins in wheelbarrows, others in mule drawn wagons and some persons came dressed as prospectors pulling a burro with packs of pennies strapped to his back. Pennies from the Collegedale Church were delivered in an armored truck with police escort. A tent of 100 x 150 feet was pitched for the occasion. The pennies were poured out on a platform which had two foot plexiglass ledge. caravans of cars could be seen coming from all corners of the conference which covers all of Georgia and the estern half of Tennessee. Bristol Tennessee District had a Tennessee Highway Patrol escort. Representative George T. Smith speaker of the Georgia House of Representatives was the keynote speaker for the gathering. Other distinguished speakers were Dr. W. A. Howe, Secretary of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventist of Washington, D. C., and Dr. C. P. Bollman, President of Southern Missionary College at Collegedale.

Music for the service was provided by the Calhoun High School band and by the Southern Missionary College Band, under the direction of Lyle Q. Hamel. W. C. Hatch was master of ceremonies.

Fertilize For Soil, Crop Needs

There are still some Virginia farmers that think 200 to 300 pounds of fertilizer per acre on corn is sufficient. Such farmers might just as well be investing in Confederate dollars!

Proper fertilition is one of the best profit making practices a Virginia farmer can use today, says George Hawkins, agronomist at Virginia Polytechni Institute. But the farmer needs to go further and ask, "How much pays?

It is necessary to meet the specific fertilizer needs of the crops, and of soils on which crops are grown. A 100-bushel crop of corn harvested for grain will remove 35 pounds of phosphate and 25 pounds of potash per acre. A 4-ton crop of alfalfa will remove 40 pounds of phosphate and 180 pounds of potash. Both crops use about the same amount of phosphate but the alfalfa needs about seven times the amount of potash used by the corn, Hawkins says. Hawkins, these crops must be fertilized differently.

Dairymen have long known that for maximum profit they must feed each cow according to her ability to produce. The same is true of soils. A Piedmont farmer producing corn on the first bottom land known as Congaree soil can average about 150 bushels per acre when the soil is handled and fertilized properly. Upland soils such as Culpeper or Lloyd on slopes of 7 to 15 percent, about 80 bushels per acre is all that can be expected. So, these soils must be fertilized differently.

Lambs Selling Higher Than Choice Steers

Many tobacco growers are considering herbicides for tobacco, and for good reasons: (1) reduces the number of cultivation labor required for hoeing; (2) reduces the number of cultivations; (3) reduces root pruning and (4) reduces the danger of lodging. Significant yield reductions have been associated with root pruning. Four herbicides have shown considerable promise. They are:

1. Diphenamid — Sold under trade name Dymid (80 percent) and Enide (50 percent). This is the only one suggested for use at this time.

2. P.E.B.C. sold under trade name of Tillam. Final label approval has not been received; it's anticipated by transplanting time.

3. D.C.P.A., sold under trade name as Dacthal. Label approval not expected this year.

4. Diphenamid plus Trifluralin sold under trade name of Treflind. Label clearance not expected for 1964.

Growers interested in detailed information about these herbicides can obtain from the county agent's office.

Traditionally, the sheep business has been a supplementary enterprise to other farm activities. Sheep can forage for themselves pretty well, though they need special attention at lambing time and feeding in the winter. They eat many plants that cattle don't favor, and get most of their sustenance from pasture. A favorite saying of sheepmen is that a good one "never dies broke!" There is a lot of truth in this. Sheep have paid some returns on their investment for many years. Being a supplemental enterprise, however, their contribution to the overall income picture, has been relatively small.

Many sheep specialists are saying that concentration of sheep on fewer acres will be the salvation of the sheep business. Concentration is the watchword with some specialists visualizing the day lambs are turned out like poultry. And there is some indication that new technology may give a stimulus to the sheep industry that will come up with a break-through. Virginia is among the leaders in this effort. Research being done at Virginia Polytechnic Institute with lambs raised in confinement on slatted floors and rebreeding ewes for an additional lamb crop a year look very promising.

Jack Copenhaver, manager of animal science farms at VPI had one ewe on this test that returned $100 in a year. The average return was $45 per ewe.

Lamb meat is in competition with the best of red meats and with poultry. This competition is intense. Beef, presently is showing the best increases in per capita consumption in this country. It seems to be gaining ground as the prestiage red meat in America.

Even the wool market is declining. The reasons for this are not too evident, but supposition is that man-made fibers and lighter weightsuits are helping to lessen demand for wool. Of course, this country has had to import about 40 percent of the wool used here for some years.

Lamb prices are up this spring for the first time in several years. Lambs are selling for more than choice steers.

Sheep have a place on many Appomattox farms.

Is Leukemia Cure Possible? Scientists Of ASC Think So

Is a breakthrough in Leukemia possible?

Many scientists think so.

Leukemia, cancer of the blood-forming tissues, has long been considered primarily a disease of childhood.

It has now become a major cancer problem: not so much among child en as among adults. The disease for some unknown reason seems to have leveled off in children, but has increased 17 per cent in adult males and 7 per cent in females in the last ten years.

It is estimated that in 1963, some 9,300 males and 6,500 females developed the disease. There is no known cure or preventive.

The American Cancer Society is devoting some of the basic answers to the growing leukemia problem. The answers, if found, may not only lead to a leukemia cure or preventive, but may help control othr cancers.

Since 1945, the American Cancer Society has spent nearly $12-600,000 on leukemia research and currently has in effect research grants, directly or indirectly related to leukemia that total over $2,000,000 — More than any other voluntary health agency.

The Society's leukemia research program seeks to answer these basic questions.

Do viruses cause human leukemia?

Can leukemia be prevented by a vaccine or other means? It can be done in animals; it remains to be seen if it can be done in humans.

Can a drug be found which will be permanently effective in checking the course of leukemia. Drugs have been found that will arrest leukemia temporarily, but not permanently.

Evidence seems to indicate that leukemia may be caused by a virus. Many scientists place their hope in this theory. Should this be found to be true, then the possibility of developing a vaccine against leukemia in humans is possible.

If a vaccine can be developed that will work against one type of cancer there is a possibility that a vaccine may be developed that will work against many types of cancer.

Pointing out that he last 15 years has seen a marked improvement in the treatment of leukemia patients, including the prolonging of lives for months and even years, the cause of leukemia has been slowed, even halted for a time, by new drugs, blood transfusions, and other therapy.

Backed by this knowledge and experience, the American Cancer Society is constantly expanding its "conquer leukemia" program. The Society began this program in 1945 with a modest allocation of a little over $11,000 for research in the field. Today this modest investment has grown into a $2,600,000 a year project.

Why this concentration on leukemia research? The experience of the Society has been that by concentrating on one form of cancer a great deal can be accomplished. The death rate from uterine cancer, for instance, has been cut 50 per cent in 25 years. If every adult woman would have a 'Pap' test as part of a routine annual health checkup, cancer deaths for this site could be drastically reduced. An annual proctosigmoidoscopy examination once a year can save many lives from cancer of the colon and rectum. Also, we have learned that about 75 per cent of those who develop lung cancer would not develop the disease if they did not smoke cigarettes. With leukemia, we seem to be on the threshold of something very important.
